Our Debt to Mr. Jephson.

From the Philadelphia North American. If the relations existing between England and America are not placed presently upon a strong basis of mutual esteem it will not be the fault of Mr. Jephson of Balliol College, Oxford. Mr. Jephson advertises in a London paper that he is prepared to teach the English language to travelers from this country. He offers to cure his pupils, or patients, of the American accent, so abhorrent to the cultivated ear, and to impart the "good address" which democratic training denies to the unhappy citizen of the United States. Mr. Jepison and others have long been mortified by the continual assassination of the king's English. For instance, who that has heard an American cere that the lear has heard an American say that the day is "bally 'ot," or that "the 'eat's fit to melt your bloomin' 'ead off," has been unable to repress a shudder for the fate of able to repress a shudder for the fate of the mother tongue? Small wonder that such villainous expressions have driven Englishmen to protest, and Mr. Jephson to the market place with his offer to educate the benighted Yankee. With scholarly pre-cision he specifies the "American twang, drawl and nasal intonation" as the de-formities of speech which he will remove at reasonable rates; and painlessly, no doubt. Possibly through an oversight he omits to mention the letter "h." which his omits to mention the letter "h," which his countrymen hold in such deserved contempt. Many influences have been fostered as tending to cement the bonds of brotherhood between England and America. Of them all the "company theory theor them all, the "common language" theory has been the most powerful. Now that the theory is in a fair way to become a fact, where is the Anglo-Saxon who will refuse to look with the kindling eye of gratitude upon the peerless Jephson of Balliol College, Oxford?

Some time since a petite, dark-eyed girl from Boston was with a party of visitors. Evidently she had been there before, as I heard her admonish her friends that they must take the elevator and be up on the first landing a little before half past twelve. In answer to inquiries she said: "The captain of the watch just on the thirty min tain of the watch just on the thirty-minute tick strikes the gong, and then you must see the cane-rush for those tables; it is just grand—it is all so strenuous!" The rules of the department have always required employes to get their lunch in the half hour ending at 1 o'clock. A restriction was placed upon the tables a few weeks ago, that no one shall be served with lunch except in that half hour. Neither visitors or residents who have business there, and have been pleased to get refreshments at the tables heretofore. but are now denied, are saying sweet and pleasant things about the administration for this, as they term it, "official hold-up of the poor women who preside at the table and deserve more kindly consideration."

fluenced the action in this matter. Dr. Stoddard feels that he is piaced in a false position before the public, and his suit will be for the purpose of compelling the trustees to either prefer charges against him or evolution. Residents of Good Hope understand that the question of supplying the town and that locality with water, which has been under discussion lately by the District authorities, is to be settled through plans which are said to have been practically decided upon. The scheme includes supplying water to the Anacostia section through the new reservoir now under construction and devoting the present Anacostia pumping station exclusively to Good Hope and the adjacent section. A supposed mad dog was shot and killed near Benning about 8:30 o'clock this morning by Policeman McTaggart. The animal was killed at the request of its owner, Mr. E. C. Green.

He had been time of her death the girl owned property under treatment at the hospital for two valued at about $60,000, left her by her parents, a large proportion of which consisted of real estate. Her will filed today is written upon a single plain piece of letter paper. It is inscribed with a lead pencil and bears no date or signature. It was apparently written without legal direction or instruction of any sort, but it is nevertheless a clear, pointed document, though very brief. It is as follows:

"This is to certify that I. Alberta Stewart, at my death bequeath all my earthly belongings, both personal and real estate, to my uncle, Albert Stewart; my sunt. Anna Belle Stewart, and my cousin, Frank Stewart, and none other. If my uncle should die without making a will his share is to go to my aunt, and should my aunt happen to die without having made a will her portion is to go to my uncle, and should they both die without wills both shares are to go to Frank. Should Frank die his share is to be equally divided between his parents."

Will Govern Personalty Only. Under the law this will, so far as it effects the real estate involved, is invalid. The girl at the time of her death was under the age of eighteen years, and therefore was not qualified to dispose of such property in her possession. Final disposition of her real estate holdings must, under the circumstances, be made by the court. Her bequests of personal property, however, will be allowed to stand Miss Stewart before her death presented the document to Amanda W. Gregory, a friend, who, in turn, handed it to Mr.
